Our File No. 40164-10009

Dear Denise and Rob:

As you requested, we have conducted an investigation whether it may be possible to obtain patent coverage for the above-captioned invention. We have completed the investigation you and I discussed. This letter provides our opinion on the prospective patentability of the motion detector and method as well as a brief discussion of the most relevant patents uncovered by our search, copies of which are enclosed.

BACKGROUND

We understand that the proposed warning device and method comprises: (1) a motion detector that detects motion only within (2) a very short range and (3) an alarm system that emits an audible warning, and (4) the motion detector being mounted on or proximate a glass or screen door or panel. The short range of the motion detector is preferably about two feet so that the audible warning occurs only when a person approaches in close proximity to the translucent medium. Preferably, the motion detector is mounted at about the horizontal center of the door. When a person or other animal walks or otherwise comes within the short range, the alarm system emits the audible warning. The audible warning warns the person or animal within the range of the presence of the translucent medium so that the person does not unwittingly walk into or through the medium. In an alternate embodiment, the motion detector may also include a sound recording device on which a user can record a personal warning or sound that will be released by the alarm system when a person or animal is within the range to set off the warning device.

If the translucent medium is a screen door, the motion detector can be mounted with a suitable mounting structure, which may be Velcro, and if it is for a metal screen, it can be mounted with a magnet. If the translucent medium is a glass panel, such as a window or door, the motion detector can be mounted with a suction cup or any other suitable mounting structure. In an alternate embodiment, the motion detector can be mounted onto an adjacent door. However, in this embodiment, the motion detector will not work as well because it will not be as location specific.

In addition, the proposed invention includes a method of audibly warning people from unwittingly walking into or through a translucent medium as a result of hearing an audible warning from an alarm system that operates when a motion detector senses a moving object within a short range of the medium. The invention serves as a safety apparatus and prevents a person from colliding with a glass or screen door.

BRIEF CONCLUSION

In our conclusion, it appears that patent protection is likely available for the proposed warning system and method.
